

3 Part Buyer Stick Strategy

Email #1

SUBJECT: Congrats on your purchase

[Name]

Congratulations on your purchase of the Seeds for Life System.

You've made a responsible decision.

Not only have you investigated the facts about the threats to our food supply, but you have also done something about it. You've taken a big step toward doing what it takes to provide for your family in the event of a food crisis.

Now that you own the system, I encourage you to get familiar with it.

To start, it's best to read it through a couple of times.

The first time through, just get the big picture. Get a handle on what this system is all about. And, feel good about what it can do for you regarding your family's food security.

The second time you read it through, take some notes. Start thinking about how you are going to implement the program, and begin to formulate a plan. Then, as soon as you can, complete your plan - including a timetable - and get yourself started.

Remember, with this system you have the ability to get all the seeds your family will ever need - for FREE. It's possible to accumulate so many seeds that you'll have plenty of extra to share with others - or use to sell or barter.

Plus, you can have the assurance that your seeds will germinate where you are, because they're locally grown.

It's capabilities like these that make this system the superior way to prepare for a food crisis.

Besides that, by using this system you will acquire valuable skills that few others have.

I wish you all the best as you begin to implement your Seeds for Life System. May it give you the assurance that your family will have all the food it ever needs.

For your survival,

Wallace Steele

Email #2

SUBJECT: One more tip about your seeds product

[Name]

Now that you have the Seeds for Life System, and hopefully are starting to get familiar with it, I wanted to pass along a quick tip that I believe will make what you have even more valuable.

Here's the tip. . .

Involve others as you implement the program.

There are a number of reasons why getting others involved makes a whole lot of sense. . .

For one, it will make accumulating a massive amount of seeds even easier. Get your kids involved and it will multiply your efforts.

Also, by getting others involved, you will be sharing valuable skills. . . skills that many more people really ought to have.

And, if you get some friends and neighbors involved, you are increasing the number of people prepared in your community - and that's a very good thing.

Finally, having others participate is fun. Preparedness is not all gloom and doom. When you make it a part of your lifestyle, it's actually a lot of fun when shared with those close to you.

So, remember, as you develop your plan to implement the Seeds for Life System, be sure and consider who besides yourself you're going to have participate.

They'll probably have some good ideas about making the most of the system, too.

For your survival,

Wallace Steele

Email #3

SUBJECT: Have you started yet?

[Name]

Just a quick note to check in with you, and encourage you to move forward as you get started with your Seeds for Life System.

This program gives you all that you need to be prepared for the food crisis that threatens us. But, of course, for you to actually be ready, you need to implement what you have..

So, as a friendly reminder. . .

Read the material and get the big picture of how this system operates.

Read the material again and take notes as you think about how you will implement the system yourself.

Finalize your plan, and set some deadlines for yourself. . . this will help hold you accountable and make sure things get done.

Start to implement your plan. . . and be sure and involve others in the process.

The Seeds for Life System is the best method I know of to give the kind of food security necessary to be prepared for food shortages.

As you use the system, you will acquire skills, amass seeds, and most of all gain confidence that you are prepared for a food crisis of any duration.

So, make sure you get yourself started, and get the peace of mind that rewards those who are prepared.

I wish you all the best.

For your survival,

Wallace Streete